

Omni Partners buys stake in Brookland Partners

10 June 2014 | By David Hatcher

Hedge fund Omni Partners has bought a stake in Brookland Partners.

Brookland is an independent real estate investment banking firm headed by managing partner and former managing director at Merrill Lynch, Nassar Hussain. It has established itself as one of the most respected debt advisors and servicers in the industry since its inception in 2009 and has advised on more than 30 transactions totalling more than €25bn.

Omni's founder and head of risk, Steve Clark, said:

"Brookland Partners has established a fantastic reputation in real estate debt, possessing one of the most experienced and innovative teams in the business. Having gained traction with investors after launching the Omni Secured Lending Fund earlier this year, we are confident that the sector and private debt funds capitalising on opportunities within the space remain attractive to institutional investors. We are excited at the prospect of developing new products in conjunction with Brookland."

Hussain said:

"The deal with Omni Partners is the next stage in Brookland's natural evolution. Omni's combination of specialist alternatives product experience and existing institutional infrastructure combined with their embodiment of entrepreneurialism and out of the box thinking made them the right fit for our business."